FLASH POINT

Occupy Wall Street protesters ousted from New York stronghold

Reuters

NEW YORK A judge upheld New York City's legal justification for evicting Occupy Wall Street protesters from a park Tuesday when police in riot gear broke up a 2-month-old demonstration against economic inequality.

Protesters will be allowed to return, but Justice Michael Stallman found the city, at least for now, can legally ban protesters from camping in tents and sleeping bags at the park between Wall Street and the World Trade Center under reconstruction in lower Manhattan.

Since Sept. 17, protesters have occupied Zuccotti Park to protest what they see as an unjust economic system that favors the wealthiest 1 percent at a time of persistently high employment, decrying a political system that bailed out banks after reckless lending sparked the financial crisis.

The Occupy Wall Street movement has triggered similar protests in cities throughout the U.S. and the world.

New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg decided the protesters had become a health and fire safety hazard and ordered police to evict them from the camp, where city officials cited reports of sexual assaults, thefts and drug dealing.

Hundreds of police stormed the camp around 1 a.m. and dismantled tents, tarps, outdoor furniture, mattresses and signs, arresting 147 people, including about a dozen who had chained themselves to each other and to trees.

With the park cleared of protesters and barricades, sanitation workers dismantled tents, hauled away trash and blasted the square with water cannons, erasing odors of urine and human waste.

In London, authorities said they were resuming legal action to try to shift anti-capitalism protesters who have set up camp at St Paul's Cathedral.

Toronto officials also told protesters to leave Tuesday.

The New York eviction followed similar actions in Atlanta, Portland, Ore., and Salt

Bloomberg dilemma

Mayor Michael Bloomberg, a self-made billionaire whose wealth made him a target of the protesters, ordered the eviction at the request of the owners of Zuccotti Park, commercial real estate company Brookfield Office Properties.

The mayor's loyalties have been divided since the protests began. Socially liberal and a supporter of free speech rights, Bloomberg is a former Wall Street trader who made a fortune selling news and information to the financial industry through his company, Bloomberg LP. REUTERS

Lake City. Unlike in Oakland, Calif., where police used tear gas and stun grenades, New York police said most protesters left peacefully.

NEXT MOVE? ANYONE'S GUESS

Reuters

NEW YORK Protest veterans had said for weeks the Occupy Wall Street movement needed to have a second act if it lost its hold on Zuccotti Park in lower Manhattan.

The question now is whether they were ready.

New York police evicted protesters from the park in the early hours Tuesday, just two days shy of the occupation's two-month anniversary. Authorities said the field of tents and people had become a health and safety threat.

The loss of the park will renew the argument about whether the Occupy movement was really about the physical taking of a prominent space or was a means to the larger end of starting a national conversation about economic and social issues.

"This has already been a success to the extent it's catalyzed a debate about equality in the country," said Michael Kazin, a professor of social movements at Georgetown University and co-editor of the magazine Dissent.

"It's forced many politicians in both parties and other public figures as well to take these issues seriously, which they were not before."

With physical space potentially unavailable, some ask whether the movement will become virtual on the Internet.

Social networks have been a lifeblood for the protests in New York and elsewhere in the U.S. and the world, keeping disparate groups connected and helping the leaderless occupations to coordinate actions.

Twitter was abuzz Tuesday with calls for a worldwide day of action Thursday.

"Even if this whole thing were shut down and stifled, this would not end," said John Reynolds, 25, a freelance information technology consultant who has been traveling to Occupy camps around the country. "We've made the connections."

Man's best friend is a bad wingman

Ana Fernatt
» redeye@tribune.com

People say the dog is man's best friend. With the way men melt for a cute pooch like a Slurpee in the sun, I've got to believe it. My dog, Figaro, is good at reeling in the bachelors, all right, and having men approach my dog first makes me less likely to run away in nervous terror.

Figaro

Yet there is a problem: Figaro is a horrible wingman. A good wingman will get the sexy singles interested and then pass the torch at the appropriate moment. Figaro, on the other hand, can't quite figure out the right time to let me take over. In fact, he's got the absolute wrong time down to a science. He worked for that attention, so he intends to keep it!

Scruffy, leggy and striking, he looks like the type of dog that would be your best friend in a cartoon. He is the pure embodiment of playful, and I'm told he looks like me in puppy form: unusual and mischievous. Even his name is memorable and fancy, though it is meant to make me laugh when I exclaim the "Barber of Seville" refrain "Figaro! Figaro! Figaro!" to scold him.

When I first brought Figaro home, I joked with my mom that I was going to use this puppy to hook a man. She took one look at the little mutt wearing his signature bow tie and said, "Not that dog." Little did she know how magnetic men would find my pup. I can't walk around the block without being stopped four or five times. Guys will grab their girlfriends' arms while passing and gasp, "Look at that dog!" It's unreal.

Each time, Figaro thinks he has found his new best friend: two more hands to pet him; someone new to give him treats. What he hasn't quite realized is that sometimes there is private playtime that his puppy tail is not invited to join.

When I'm trying to snuggle up to my new dude and my petite pup wants to sit on my date's head, there is no Sade album or plate of oysters that can rescue that mood. I have literally woken up in the middle of the night with this dog standing on my chest with his nose pinned against mine.

The last dog I had was an elderly cocker spaniel that would insist on plunking herself between my man friend and me while we tried to watch movies on the couch. There would be no funny business on her watch!

Both game-wrecking dogs were birthday presents from my parents—a suspicious trend. I think my dad gave me this dog in lieu of personally holding post outside my apartment.

Last week, Figaro pooped on my pillowcase. Well, I guess not on MY pillowcase, but rather the empty one lying next to me—the one that I hope a man's head will at some point occupy. This is not going to go over well for my single life.

TREND-SEEKING SPOTS MAKING THEIR WAY AMID LINCOLN PARK'S SPORTS-BAR VIBE

By Lisa Arnett and Emily Van Zandt

REDEYE

Big Ten sports bars packed with recent grads. Pub floors sticky with cheap beer. DePaul students dancing until 3 a.m. before a pizza run on the way back to the dorms. This is Lincoln Park nightlife.

Or is it?

A recent crop of seriously buzzed-about bars and restaurants opening in Lincoln Park—Morso, 2 Sparrows, The Barrelhouse Flat, Butcher & The Burger among them—is bringing with it a new kind of energy the neighborhood hasn't felt in a while.

With its powder blue walls and vest-wearing bartender, Morso's upstairs cocktail lounge feels more like Logan Square's The Whistler than anything else nearby. At breakfast-and-lunch cafe 2 Sparrows, foie gras pop tarts and giant tater tots push the envelope beyond the typical brunch fare served at other neighborhood spots. The extensive cocktail menu at The Barrelhouse Flat gives craft cocktail trailblazer The Violet Hour in Wicker Park a run for its money.

And there are more spots like this on the way.

So why this mini-explosion in this established North Side 'hood when the rest of the bar and restaurant world seems to have its eye on more up-and-coming neighborhoods such as Logan Square or Pilsen?

Stephen Cole, a former Violet Hour mixologist who last month opened his throwback cocktail lounge, The Barrelhouse Flat, among a strip of taverns on Lincoln Avenue, says he saw a need in the neighborhood.

"Logan Square ... already [has] their cocktail bar," he said. "Lincoln Park didn't have those middle-class kind of spots. You've got Alinea [where dinner costs in the hundreds per person] on one end and then all the sports bars on the other."

"People were surprised" when they first heard about his chosen location, he said. "They kind of shrugged their shoulders, cracked a joke."

Cole is not the only one betting on Lincoln Park with a start-up that might sound better suited to other 'hoods.

Chef Allen Sternweiler's burger shop, Butcher & The Burger, which recently opened down the street from chain burger spot Johnny Rockets, is breaking the mold with elk burgers and smoked-bacon frozen custard. He and his business partner deliberately chose Lincoln Park over less established neighborhoods they thought might have been more risky.

"The neighborhood has already established itself over many, many years," Sternweiler said. "It's close to downtown, it's close to the zoo, it's close to the highway and there seems to be enough disposable income there."

Butcher &amp; The Burger

The Barrelhouse Flat

He added: "I used to live in Pilsen ... and I think [it] still has another five years to go before I would consider going down there."

Kevin Boehm and Rob Katz of the Boka Restaurant Group chose Lincoln Park for their first restaurant, Boka, back in 2003, before Grant Achatz's Alinea moved in just steps away in 2005. The two chose to stay in the neighborhood for their newest project, Baleana, which will showcase the cooking prowess of Chris Pandel, chef at trendy Bucktown restaurant The Bristol, along with pastry chef Amanda Rockman, most recently seen on "Top Chef: Just Desserts."

"In order to do really big numbers, you want to be able to get everything ... the destination diner, the between 5-7 [p.m.] crowd—check there because you have [theaters such as] Steppenwolf, Second City, Royal George—and you want to be able to have concierges send guests to your restaurant [from downtown hotels]," Katz said.

But pre-theater cocktails and lunching moms don't necessarily equal a successful run in Lincoln Park, and new spots that don't have the name recognition of the Boka Group face the challenge of fitting into the neighborhood's young nightlife scene fueled by new-to-Chicago young professionals and students at DePaul, one of the neighborhood's anchors.

When the latter group hit The Barrelhouse Flat on its opening weekend, worlds collided. Rather than experimenting with new tastes off the lounge's $10 cocktail list, coeds filled table after table with pints of cheap beer.

"I'm a grad student on a budget," said DePaul student Hailly Wakeland, 22. "I don't have the money to spend on [an expensive] cocktail."

And while some Lincoln Park residents think a non-student crowd from other neighborhoods could be persuaded to visit these new spots, it remains to be seen whether they'll draw consistent business.

Ariel Delarosa, 22, who recently moved to Lincoln Park from Logan Square, thinks The Barrelhouse Flat is a good alternative to the normal Lincoln Avenue scene, but she doubts the flood of trendier openings signal a bigger change.

"There are about 10 bars within a three-block radius of my house, all Big Ten sports bars," Delarosa said. "I think people will come over [for The Barrelhouse Flat]. Will they stay afterward and party at Mad River or Halligan's? Probably not."

Cole, of The Barrelhouse Flat, is optimistic.

"I honestly feel like there's quite a big population in Lincoln Park, so there should be a lot of pull from them," he said.

ONE FINE DAY

Chicago Tribune

Chicagoans who abide by city rules face higher fees for water, vehicle stickers and garage parking under Mayor Emanuel's budget that comes up for a vote Wednesday.

And woe to city residents who run afoul of the law. Not only are they on the hook for all of the above, they'll also face steeper fines.

Get caught tampering with a water meter? You'll pay as much as $750 instead of just facing the prospect of having the spigot turned off.

Fail to cut your high weeds? Expect to pay up to $1,200 a day instead of $1,000, assuming the inspector is on the lookout.

Flee the cops in your car? It will cost $2,000 to get it out of the impound lot, twice as much as it does now.

The new mayor is counting on such bad behavior to balance his first spending plan, which anticipates racking up at least $26 million from increased fines.

The idea of hitting scofflaws harder is not a new approach—former Mayor Richard M. Daley raised a host of fines in 2008, and before that he installed red-light cameras that have proved to be a cash cow for City Hall—but Emanuel has ramped up the practice as he tries to balance the books without hiking property or sales taxes.

Some aldermen might not like it, but it's not expected to derail Emanuel's carefully crafted $6.3 billion budget from passing the City Council by a wide margin Wednesday.

Which fines would increase

The City Council is set to vote on Mayor Emanuel's budget, which includes a variety of fine increases. Some are below.

OFFENSE	OLD FINE	NEW FINE
Tampering with city water meter	Shut off	$500-$750*
No vehicle sticker (large truck)	$120	$500
Late fee for vehicle sticker	$40	$60
Vehicle impound fee for arrests	$1,000	$2,000
Failure to cut weeds, grass	$500-$1,000	$600-$1,200
Illegal garbage dumping	$250-$500	$300-$600
Parking in residential zone without permit	$60	$75

*Includes potential shutoff

**If the arrest happened within 500 feet of a park or school, fee is $3,000

The CTA board on Tuesday approved a $1.24 billion budget for 2012 that presumes no fare hikes, service cuts or employee layoffs based on management achieving unprecedented concessions from labor unions. The board also approved an agreement to implement a new fare-collection system.

Dining with the stars

By Lisa Arnett

REDEYE

The Michelin Guide's second annual Chicago edition was released Tuesday, and the local chefs are seeing stars—but fewer than last year, it turns out.

The famous French guide is notoriously tightfisted when it comes to awarding its star designations (three means exceptional, two is excellent and one is very good). In this year's guide, 21 Chicago-area restaurants received stars, down from 23 last year.

Of the two restaurants—Alinea and L2O—that received three-star ratings in Michelin's first Chicago guide last year, only one, Grant Achatz's renowned Alinea in Lincoln Park, maintained its status. The other, Lettuce Entertain You Enterprises' high-end seafood restaurant L2O, was downgraded to one star, which some predicted after a bit of chef shuffling.

In the two-star category, Charlie Trotter's and Ria maintained their status. The Peninsula Hotel's Avenues received two stars last year, but

WHERE'S NEXT?

Theories are flying as to why Grant Achatz's new restaurant Next, the hottest ticket (literally, you have to get tickets) in town this year, didn't receive any stars. Maybe the inspectors couldn't get in? Or maybe the menu, which reboots quarterly, is too fluid to give a fair review. Michelin gave Next's neighbor Moto one star, so clearly they know their way to the 900 block of Fulton Market.

closed earlier this year after the departure of chef Curtis Duffy.

Besides L2O, 17 other restaurants received one-star ratings. Homaru Cantu's whimsical West Loop restaurant Moto is a new addition, and French bistro Crofton on Wells, the Trump Tower's restaurant, Sixteen, and Nomi (which reconcepted into Nomi Kitchen this year) were the only restaurants not re-awarded their one-star rating this year.

Coach: I told police about alleged attack

1 Mike McQueary, the Penn State assistant football coach under fire for his reported lack of action in an alleged 2002 rape of a boy by Jerry Sandusky, said in an email to a former classmate that he stopped the assault in an athletic facility shower and discussed it with police.

In the email obtained by The Morning Call newspaper in Pennsylvania, McQueary wrote that he "did have discussions with police and with the official at the university in charge of police" following the alleged incident between Sandusky, a former assistant coach, and a boy.

Governor under fire

2 A long anticipated recall drive aimed at removing Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker got under way Tuesday with opponents of the Republican fanning out across the state to gather the first of the 540,000 signatures they will need to force a vote.

Executions in 2 states

3 Florida and Ohio each executed men by lethal injection Tuesday, one for killing a mother and two daughters on vacation and another for shooting his three sons. The executions brought to 41 the number of people put to death in the U.S. this year.

Another quake

4 A 5.2-magnitude temblor shook eastern Turkey shortly after midnight Tuesday. It followed a 7.2-magnitude earthquake in the region last month, and a subsequent 5.6-magnitude quake last week.

Hacked Facebook has users ticked off

If you checked your Facebook NewsFeed on Monday night and found a dirty Photoshopped picture of Justin Bieber or an image of a beaten and bloodied dog, you are not alone.

Facebook users report that for the past 24 hours the social networking site has been infested with a mix of hardcore pornographic images, doctored pictures of celebrities in sexual situations, photos of extreme violence and, yes, a picture of a beaten dog.

Now, Facebook says it has identified the problem—but not the culprit.

In a statement, Facebook spokesman Andrew Noyes acknowledged that the site was the target of a coordinated spam attack and explained how it went down.

"During this spam attack, users were tricked into pasting and executing malicious javascript in their browser URL bar causing them to unknowingly share this offensive content," he said. "Our engineers have been working diligently on this self-XSS vulnerability in the browser."

In the meantime, he said Facebook has built enforcement mechanisms to quickly shut down the malicious pages. He also said the company has been putting people who were affected by the offensive spam through "educational checkpoints" so they know how to protect themselves in the future.

The images were so graphic that it caused some people to say they were going to quit Facebook.

"If I see another picture of a dead dog on facebook or anything else like that, I will probably delete my account," wrote Big_A22 (Aaron Lichtenwater).

And Fustz (Thomas Morris) tweeted, "Dont really wanna go on facebook anymore, the dead dog made me sad."

THE DIGIT

$5.1 billion

The U.S. Postal Service reported an annual loss of $5.1 billion Tuesday, as declining mail volumes and mounting benefit costs take their toll on the agency. The Postal Service said in a statement that its losses would have been roughly $10.6 billion if Congress had not passed legislation postponing a $5.5 billion payment.

MEET MR. 903

Duke's Coach K wins again (yawn)

Why does everybody seem to hate Duke so much?

That big number at the top of this page might have something to do with it. The Blue Devils are the evil empire of college basketball. They are the N.Y. Yankees, the Miami Heat and the Dallas Cowboys. They are the team that elicits cheers when losing and jeers when winning.

And it's all coach Mike Krzyzewski's fault.

The Chicago-born 64-year-old has been the mastermind behind the team's success since 1980.

On Tuesday night, Duke beat Michigan State to give Krzyzewski win No. 903, making him the winningest men's college basketball coach ever and displacing his mentor, Bob Knight.

Where does Krzyzewski's accomplishment place him among other sports' top coaches and managers? Right here, that's where.

No NBA? College will do

Ernest Wilkins

» @remixchicago

With the NBA all but a distant memory, it's a real relief that good ol' fashioned hoops are in session once again.

The folks here at the RedEye think it would be a good call to let me provide a 2011-12 season preview (I don't have the heart to tell them). This is not an in-depth look at conferences and RPI—I don't know what it means either—but a super-focused look at college basketball from a guy who doesn't care about the NCAA until the last week of February, when I spent ridiculous amounts of time making it seem like I've been watching every game of the season.

Here are some things to keep in mind as the season kicks off.

» Pack it up, mascots, the coolest event of the year already happened. Did you SEE that Michigan State-North Carolina game last week on the aircraft carrier? Holy crap was that cool to watch. The only way you can top a game on a boat is if the boat is moving, the cannons go off on big 3-pointers and the starting lineups enter via jet.

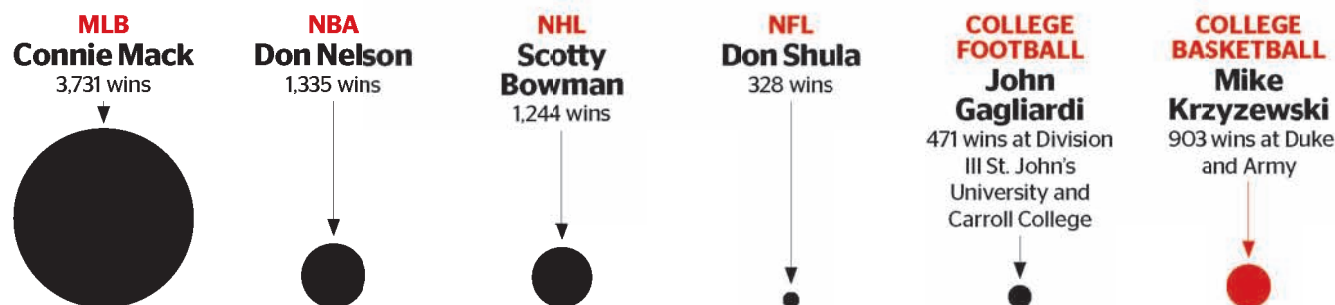

» Pick three teams to follow this season and actually keep up with them. Think about fantasy football. It forces you to care about a crappy Browns-Chiefs matchup. Apply that to college ball. In case you're wondering, my teams to watch this year are Villanova (middle-of-the-road team in a big conference), Oral Roberts (because I giggled when I saw the name) and Northwestern (just kidding).

» Beware the football-school kid. There are a lot of schools in the great land that have excellent football programs but abysmal basketball programs. Few things are more frustrating than that kid who still brings football-fueled passion to a wack excuse for a hoops squad. Nebraska/Iowa fan? Find something else to talk about. I can say this, as someone whose school recently went from horrible to ranked in college basketball.

I'd like to take a second and say hello to everyone who emails me saying I talk about Florida State too much. Love you guys.

Just win, baby

Sure, Coach K has more than 900 wins. But compared with some coaches and managers in other sports, well, he's just starting out.

1	How did you mourn the latest NBA setback?	Ripped Soxman's socks off his head and shoved them up ... whoa, sorry, got a little violent there.	By watching a YouTube video of LeBron getting owned by a high-schooler. Never gets old.	I got stern with the NBA commissioner and had a beef with Kobe.	What's the NBA?	I went to my happy place: Julie's house. I love her cookies.
2	What do the Luvabulls do during the NBA lockout?	Whatever it is, it's fine by me as long as they continue to dedicate themselves to hotness.	Work in secret meetings to restructure the collective bargaining agreement. In hot pants.	Reject proposals from both players and owners. No unions for these heartbreakers!	Probably something else that pays $20 a day.	Aren't they all just moms?
3	What is Green Bay's weakness?	Trigonometry. Can't blame them, to be honest.	Cheese.	Christmas. Believe, Bears fans.	It's tough to get to and smells funny from all the paper mills.	They really don't like playing in the rain. Gets their costumes all dirty.
4	What's behind the recent spate of NFL season-ending injuries?	Just guessing, but maybe it has something to do with 300-pound men running into one another at full speed.	This phenomenon appears to be taking a heavy toll on guys named "Matt." I'd change my name.	Hawk Harrelson told me it could be that the players are forgetting to "strrrretchhh."	A terrible shortage of HGH? Too many games against the Dirty Lions?	The NBA lockout. Right?
5	How will the Cubs and Red Sox finally solve the Theo Epstein compensation talks?	Vegetable oil. An inflatable pool full of Jell-O. Man-thongs. The winner names the price.	We send them Ronnie Woo-Woo, they send us the rights to "Sweet Caroline."	After exchanging curses they will share a Baby Ruth and a cheeseburger at the Billy Goat.	As long as the compensation isn't that the Cubs send Theo back to Boston, who cares?	Maybe they won't solve it. I'm still working on my Rubik's Cube.

CASHING OUT

NBA players missed their first paycheck Tuesday. What'd they lose?

RedEye

Hey, NBA players, the checks are not in the mail. They would have been if not for that pesky lockout. You see, Tuesday would have been the first payday for NBA players. Instead they were at home counting the stacks of money they've already earned. But there's no such thing as too much money, right?

At any rate, here's what a few NBA stars would have received Tuesday, according to Business Insider.

COPS AND JOCKS

Adam 'Pacman' Jones

The Cincinnati Bengals cornerback avoided more jail time Tuesday when a Las Vegas attorney decided not to pursue the matter. Jones was involved in a bar scuffle in Cincinnati during the summer that could have put him in violation of a judge's order to stay out of trouble. Instead, the 28-year-old will conduct 75 more hours of community service on top of the 200 he's already served after he entered a no-contest plea after a Vegas strip club melee in 2007. Just another day in a sports star's life.

home away from home

Fitz and the Tantrums return for three sold-out shows in a city
that clearly loves them

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

Fitz & the Tantrums frontman Michael "Fitz" Fitzpatrick will always remember the group's first trek to Chicago, since the sextet arrived in town for a show at Metro just one day after Snowpocalypse, the epic February blizzard that brought the city to a standstill.

"When we pulled up, they were literally just pulling the cars off Lake Shore Drive," the 40-year-old singer said.

At this point, the weather might be all that can cool off the L.A. soul revivalists, who were named Hot Band in a recent issue of Rolling Stone and are gearing up to play three sold-out shows at Metro. Reached on the road, Fitzpatrick talked about his introduction to soul music, the coffee shop he has to visit in Chicago and why he considers himself the ultimate awkward-white-guy dancer.

I don't want to start off sounding like Joe Biden here, but three sold-out Metro shows? This is a big [bleeping] deal. [Laughs.] Yeah, it's kind of crazy. The first time we ever came to the city was the day after Snowpocalypse. Joe Shanahan at Metro took a chance on us, and we ended up selling out that night. We had some sort of amazing connection with Chicago right from the start.

How are you planning to keep things fresh for fans who head out to all three shows?

We're going to put our heads together as we're out on tour and try and come up with some new ideas. We may play one or two songs we don't usually play. We're working on some new songs now, and we'll see if we can get some of those up and running.

Is it difficult to keep your energy level up playing multiple nights?

We're used to it. It's definitely an ass-kicker. It's a high-energy show and [singer] Noelle [Scaggs] and I never stop moving the entire time, so it starts to take its toll physically. As the tour goes on, I tend to sleep more and more. Some days I'm so depleted that I'm literally comatose until the moment we go onstage.

Any plans for your downtime in Chicago?

My dad used to work at the Museum of Contemporary Art, so I'm sure I'm going to go do a tour of that. And [drummer] John Wicks and myself are incredible coffee addicts, so we'll be making our way to Mecca, otherwise known as Intelligentsia.

What was the highlight of playing Lollapalooza here this summer?

We've all grown up with Lollapalooza, and for us it was a real benchmark of all the hard work we've put in over the last 2 1/2 years. We had an early time slot and didn't know if anyone was going to show up or not, and then there were like 20,000 people there to see us. It was incredible.

Considering the year you've had, I'm curious to hear about the least glamorous thing you've had to endure.

Well, the dark underbelly of touring is that it's 23 hours of unglamorous lifestyle for one hour of glory. Yesterday was the first shower I've taken in three days. You're salvaging socks and underwear and trying desperately to find a place to do laundry. It's hard work.

How did you develop your love of soul music?

I grew up with parents who were classical music freaks, and my dad would only let that be played on the radio. The first time I was able to choose, I negotiated putting on an oldies station while driving to school in the morning. It was really there that I found those songs ... and I just instantly gravitated towards them.

Were you conscious of the fact that you had to put your own twist on the genre to keep from sounding like a retro act?

Yeah. I think we definitely knew we didn't want to be a pastiche, and we wanted to put our own spin on things. We didn't adhere to the form perfectly. We let our other natural influences—like '80s new wave and Brit-pop and some of those-hip-hop backbeats—kind of come through.

Your music is obviously great for dancing, but do you consider yourself much of a dancer?

I do in terms of being an awkward-white-guy dancer. Like, I can do the robot really well.

What advice would you have for someone like yourself who might lack rhythm, but really wants to get down at the show?

Don't think about it. Just let yourself go.

REVIEW Chronicles II

Gym Class Heroes run through so many styles on "The Paper Cut Chronicles II" that it's often hard to believe it all comes from the same band. The pop stuff is likable and radio-friendly but kind of anonymous—with "Stereo Hearts" more about Adam Levine, and "Fighter" more about Ryan Tedder. The rock stuff fares better, especially the guitar-heavy "Martyrial Girl" and the Linkin Park-ish "Solo Discotheque," while the heavier hip-hop songs land a little too close to Eminem. All the Heroes' worship gets confusing. GLENN GAMBOA, NEWSDAY

HOT SONG 50'Clock

T-Pain

T-Pain takes some risks on his new single, "50'Clock." No, he hasn't abandoned his trademark-but-tired AutoTuned sound, but he does augment it with Lily Allen actually singing a pretty strong hook and Wiz Khalifa rapping a memorable verse. The song is about late-night booty calls, but the midtempo, kinda-foggy ballad still manages to seem a bit smitten, with T-Pain mellowing out his usually hyper, "Megagigabytes, son!" cartoonish self. Has he actually gotten serious? GLENN GAMBOA, NEWSDAY

BAR-GUMENTS

SETTLING AGE-OLD, BAR-BASED DISAGREEMENTS ONE ARGUMENT AT A TIME

What is a bar-gument, you say? For as long as there have been watering holes, there have been disagreements. Some people prefer martinis with gin, some with vodka. Bar-guments is here to settle some longstanding bar conflicts once and for all.

This week: Is sherry cool to drink or something only Grandma orders?

@REDEYCHICAGO

I gotta stick up for my misunderstood pal, sherry. I, too, used to think it was some overly sweet stuff that old people ordered at stuffy restaurants. But then I learned how versatile this fortified wine made in the Jerez region of Spain really is. There are dry sherries, sweet sherries and plenty in between. Whether it's a super-dry fino for sipping with cheese and olives or a syrupy, rich Pedro Ximenez poured over vanilla ice cream, I will order it every chance that I get.

When I think sherry, I think old people. Is this ageist? I'm sorry. My favorite drink is a bloody mary. It was also my grandpa's favorite drink. This is probably not a coincidence. But the point is: I can afford to support only one old person drink at a time. I get enough crap from bartenders as it is whenever I order a bloody mary post-brunch. A girl can take only so much.

Let the games begin

5 shows that raise the bar—or bring it to you—on audience participation

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

Sure, the nights are getting longer. But who wants to stay in and watch other people win refrigerators during "Let's Make a Deal" reruns? If you've got game, get out and join the fun at these interactive game show-style shows, which feature everything from drinking contests to physical challenges and wheel-spinning to trivia—and even a little sex, which is never a bad thing.

JULIA BORCHERTS IS REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

The Sunday Night Sex Show

Add some spark to your Sunday at this salacious salon-in-a-saloon, where Chicago scribes read humorous, true tales about their sex lives. Want in on the action? In between stories, local performers Robyn Pennacchia and Samantha Irby answer your love life questions and host down-and-dirty trivia with adult prizes. But be warned—to claim your prize, you have to answer a "truth or dare"-type question.
Go: 7:30 p.m. every last Sunday of the month at The Burlington, 3425 W. Fullerton Ave.
Tickets: Free! 773-384-3243

The Game Show Show and Stuff

Whether you excel at physical challenges or cerebral exertions, there's something for everyone at this show, which features music, dance and comedy performances alongside interactive contests with names like "Trivia Treasure Trove," "Mixed Metaphors," "What Is Sinko'd in the Mayo?" and our personal icebreaking favorite, "You or Me (or Me or You)," where strangers make up intimate details about each other.
Go: 11 p.m. Fridays-Saturdays through Dec. 31 (except Dec. 24) at Mercury Theater, 3745 N. Southport Ave.
Tickets: $15; 773-325-1700; gameshowshow.com

Shame That Tune

Want to relive adolescent humiliations? We didn't think so. Better to watch others relate embarrassing tales and see them transformed into Journey-style anthems or Miley Cyrus-esque ditties, like at this monthly comedic competition. Contestants spin a wheel featuring musical sub-genres—which the audience can override if they think that "Bob Dylan's Christian Phase" might make for a funnier song than "Ke$ha"—and then relate a five-minute story. Host Brian Costello conducts short, humorous interviews with the readers and pianist Abraham Levitan turns the tales into spontaneous songs in the selected sub-genres. Audience members cheer for their favorite contestant, who wins baked goods. December's lineup features comedian Emerson Dameron, writer Emilie Syberg and filmmaker Nathan Godfrey.
Go: 6:30 p.m. Dec. 9 at Hideout, 1354 W. Wabansia Ave.
Tickets: $5; 773-227-4433; hideoutchicago.com

Bye Bye Liver: The Chicago Drinking Play

Play classic interactive drinking games including "Never Have I Ever" and "Would You Rather?" plus an original "Match Maker" game at this booze-themed sketch comedy show. Drink specials are plentiful, naturally, including $4.50 house cocktails and $15 domestic buckets to get you primed to compete.
Go: 8 and 10 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays (open run) at Fizz Bar & Grill, Pub Theater, second floor, 3220 N. Lincoln Ave.
Tickets: $20; 773-904-8777; byebyeliver.com

pHlip Cup

Volunteer—on your own or in a group of up to six friends—to compete against a flip cup team made up of cast members at this improv show in which the cast forms a fictional group of losers—perhaps the Han Solo Cups (nerds) or the D Cups (desperate cougars), but this week, it's the "pHinger Blast" (frat guys)—who attempt to overcome adversity and win the challenge with suggestions from the audience.

Go: 10 p.m. Fridays (open run) at Studio BE, 3110 N. Sheffield Ave.
Tickets: $10; $5 for students; 773-732-5450; whatisph.com

If you get excited at the use of phrases such as “graphical user interface,” “Steve Jobs: The Lost Interview” likely will feel like a fantastic slab of previously unseen geek porn.

For others, this 70-minute interview with the late billionaire, conducted in 1995 so a small snippet could be used for a PBS miniseries titled “Triumph of the Nerds,” will combine a significant amount of subjectively dull computer speak with anecdotes and philosophies that register as brilliantly fascinating in hindsight.

Nothing has been done to beef up the documentary with additional biographical information or contextualize Jobs’ comments, and this review’s star rating evaluates its existence as a film that does or does not need to be seen. “The Lost Interview” simply runs as an hour or so of an interviewer (Robert Cringely) occasionally asking questions and a guy answering them at length. When that guy turned Apple into what it is today, however, plenty can be learned just by listening to his terrifically simplistic thoughts on what sparked his move to personal computers (“Necessity”) and running a business (asking questions, thinking and working hard are all you really need, Jobs says).

Jobs emerges as someone truly energized and inspired by what innovation and determination can achieve. “The Lost Interview” serves, if nothing else, as a glimpse behind the curtain and a useful lesson for recruiters and management: Acquire intelligent people who believe in a product and push them to do their best. What a concept!

Versace for H&M shrunk leather biker jacket and silk miniskirt with Greek key motif (clockwise from left); a tropical print miniskirt; a mixed-print purse.

CHEAP CHIC

Tribune Newspapers

The latest cheap chic collaboration, Versace for H&M, may be the best Versace collection to come along in years—more Gianni than Donatella, more South Beach than Milano.

The collection hits stores Thursday, and you can bet there is going to be a stampede for the bright baroque patterns and sexy body-conscious cuts, both signatures of the Versace brand's heyday in the 1980s and '90s.

The mixed tropical prints on skintight pants and minidresses are right on trend for spring. (Until the weather warms, then shoppers may have to rock their Versace for H&M on the dance floor instead of the street.)

The collection is a greatest hits retrospective of sorts, with the slinky black gown with gold hardware ($149) evoking Gianni's famous safety pin dress from 1994, made famous by Elizabeth Hurley.

The shrunk studded leather biker jacket looks as if it has a great fit, and the silk miniskirt with Versace's iconic Greek key motif on the hem is fun. The leather appears as if it would be buttery soft, which is amazing for the price ($299 for the leather jacket and minidress). The accessories are fun too, including chunky bracelets and chokers, sculpted flower rings, silk scarves and purses with heavy chain handles and palm tree prints.

Oh yeah, and there's some men's stuff too—including a black-and-white op art print shirt and matching pants that are nothing short of amazing—for the guy who dares to wear!

Will the collection be as big a seller as Lanvin for H&M in 2010? Possibly. But Lanvin designer Alber Elbaz's designs were more forgiving. H&M makes clothes for the masses, and not all the masses have the bodies for body-con.

Cry me a river

An open letter to Justin Timberlake regarding his upsetting lack of new music

Dear Justin,

Can we call you Justin? We may not be on a first-name basis just yet, but you've always made us feel so at ease that we just can't help but ... OK, Justin it is. Anyway, we've been meaning to bring this up for a while, but we thought you might figure it out on your own. It's OK, because we know you can't read our minds, even though we're pretty sure you can read our hearts.

At this point, you're probably wondering a) Whether we can see into your bedroom and b) What the hell is going on here. In regards to a), we wish. But this letter isn't about that. It's about the music, Justin. Those sweet, sweet beats that rocked our bodies and brought sexy back. It's been five cold, hollow years since "Future Sex/Love Sounds," and we're starting a to feel a little neglected.

We know we're not the only ones. Our favorite be-sweatered Canadian, Drake, told Billboard that you broke his fuzzy little man-heart when you didn't have time to appear on his album. Apparently you teased him (and us), saying "... we'll work as soon as I'm back in the studio." When will that be, Justin? When?

We get it, this whole movie-star thing is going great for you. But woven amid the action scenes and onscreen romances are hints that even you are missing the former N'Syncer inside. In "Friends With Benefits," you popped out a Kriss Kross routine to woo Mila Kunis, and even sang Semisonic's "Closing Time" while giving her ladypleasures. Justin, your music is better than that, even if those tunes were enough to whip Mila into a lusty frenzy.

And she's not alone. According to a recent poll conducted by us watching a YouTube video of your "History of Rap" performance on "Late Night With Jimmy Fallon," scores of screaming Americans just cannot get enough of the sight of a mic in your hand. Imagine what could happen if you were spitting your own rhymes instead of Missy Elliott's.

So please, Justin, for the sake of our R&B/pop-crazed eardrums, drop the movie scripts, pick up your swagger and get back on that stage. In exchange, we promise never to bring up that time you and Britney Spears wore matching denim outfits ever again.

Love,

Dana Moran, RedEye

Jenny McCarthy and Pamela Anderson are two of the 50 most iconic blondes of all time, according to Playboy magazine. The two bombshells appear in the magazine's "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" pictorial that also includes Sharon Stone, Marilyn Monroe, Christie Brinkley and Cheryl Tiegs.

Cool cat

GQ Breakout Man of the Year Michael Fassbender has no complaints about Mila Kunis being named to the men's mag's list. "I like her style," the actor, whose "Shame" opens Dec. 2 and "A Dangerous Method" starts Dec. 16, told RedEye's Matt Pais. "She seems to have a very sort of generous spirit. She's in amongst the boys. A cat amongst the pigeons." LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE PHOTO

After eight years as host of "The Soup" on the E! network, Joel McHale (right) still loves his job. "I kind of see myself as the old man at the sanitation department who has gotten a little bit high off the fumes as he pulls different kinds of feces out of the trough," he told the New York Post. At least we think that means he loves his job. GETTY IMAGES/FILE PHOTO

It seems Lauren Conrad is back in the game after her split from "My Boys" actor Kyle Howard. The "Hills" star was seen flirting with "Glee's" Cory Monteith in Hollywood over the weekend, people.com reports.
